In 1955 G. Henle Publishers released a catalogue of all of Ludwig van Beethoven's completed works prepared by Georg Kinsky and Hans Halm – a milestone in Beethoven literature. Since then, there have been a great number of developments in many areas of Beethoven research.

The new complete edition of the works has impressively progressed, and Beethoven's entire correspondence and conversation books have been issued in outstanding editions. A number of pioneering works on Beethoven's creative process have also changed our view of the composer. This was reason enough to incorporate the current state of research into a new standard work suited for a broad readership!

This new Beethoven Catalogue of Works, which has grown to nearly 2000 pages, facilitates the access to individual works through its clear structure: the information on the historical aspects of every work – genesis, edition, first performances, dedicatees, etc. – is followed by the description of the manuscripts and prints in a second section. And now, for the first time, not only the autographs but also the drafts and sketches to the work are comprehensively identified. The prints also comprise reprints and arrangements from Beethoven's time, and list the locations where they were found.

Twenty-three new works have joined the section on compositions without opus number. In addition, there are also special chapters on unfinished works by Beethoven, on his composition studies, his opera and oratorio plans as well as copies of works by other composers and from theoretical writings. Extensive overviews and indices make it easier for the reader to find the desired information.

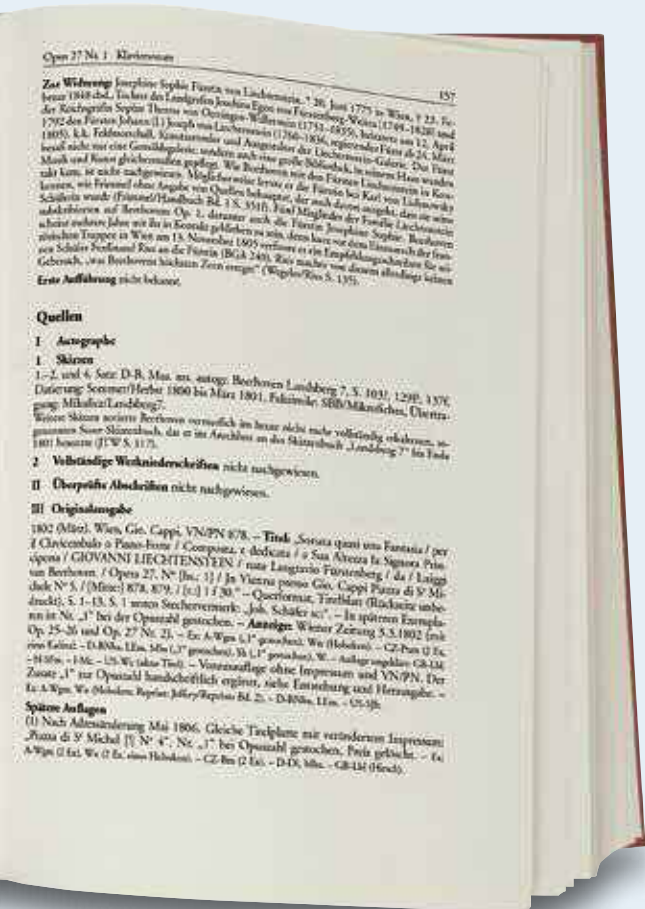

The new Beethoven reference work is on its way!
